Introduction: On 10-12-2021 we had the opportunity to visit the ABT plant tissue culture laboratory renowned for its innovative work in plant propagation and research. The purpose of the visit was to gain insights into the fascinating world of plant tissue culture and understand the techniques and applications employed in this field.

Lab Tour: Upon arrival, we were warmly welcomed by G Anand Reddy, Director, who began the visit with an insightful introduction to the lab's activities. The tour started with a comprehensive explanation of the lab's layout, highlighting key areas such as the preparation zone, sterile working area, growth rooms, and specialized equipment rooms.

Sterilization and Preparation: The first stop was the preparation area, where the process of creating culture media was demonstrated. The guide explained the significance of sterilization techniques in preventing contamination and ensuring the success of tissue cultures. The attention to detail and the strict adherence to sterile practices were evident in this section.

Micropropagation and Culture Techniques: Moving forward, the micropropagation section captured my attention. I observed technicians delicately working with tiny plant parts, such as shoot tips and nodal segments. The guide elucidated the purpose of micropropagation and how it allows for the rapid multiplication of genetically identical plants, a crucial technique for plant breeding and commercial production.

Specialized Culture Techniques: The lab also showcased advanced techniques such as callus culture, organogenesis, and somatic embryogenesis. These processes illustrated the lab's commitment to research and innovation. Seeing undifferentiated cells being induced to form new plant organs was a truly remarkable experience.

Acclimatization and Transfer: After the plants had successfully grown in the controlled environment, the guide explained the process of acclimatization. The transition from the lab to natural conditions was discussed, underscoring the importance of gradually adapting the plants to external factors.

Applications and Implications: Throughout the visit, the guide emphasized the various applications of plant tissue culture. These included producing disease-free plants, genetically modified organisms, and conserving endangered plant species. Ethical considerations and environmental implications were also touched upon, adding depth to the discussions.

Question and Answer Session: The visit concluded with an engaging question and answer session. Visitors were encouraged to ask questions, clarifying doubts and gaining deeper insights into the techniques, processes, and applications discussed during the tour. The knowledgeable staff provided comprehensive answers and further enriched the learning experience.

Conclusion: In conclusion, the visit to ABT tissue culture lab was an eye-opening and educational experience. Witnessing the meticulous techniques and advanced procedures in plant tissue culture broadened my understanding of the field's significance in modern agriculture, research, and conservation efforts. The lab's dedication to scientific excellence and innovation left a lasting impression, inspiring a newfound appreciation for the art and science of growing plants through tissue culture.

We extend our sincere gratitude to the team at ABT Tissue culture laboratory for their hospitality and willingness to share their expertise
